Shakespeare reimagined

Activity 1 - The Twelfth Night
Sebastian's Tale

Thunder crashing into the seas while the ship drowned into the ruthless waters. Aboard the frail ship, were panic-stricken twins, Sebastian and Viola, clinging to each other as the raging sea swept past them. The heartless ocean devoured the vast ship.

Soon after, Sebastian woke up weary on an island. Bewildered, he looked around. The island was called Athira - which was next to the Illirya. It had palm trees as big as buildings, topaz sand that glittered in the sunlight and the waves glistened the rocks. Suddenly Sebastian saw Viola on the other island, he waved, he screamed, he even tried to throw a rock at her just to get her attention. But it was no use, he could not get her to see him not one tiny bit.

Just then, Sebastian figured, if she cannot come to him then he will just come to her. So he set off a journey with remarkable discoveries.

While he was finding a way to get to Viola, he saw a rusty old bridge to get to the other side. The bridge was ancient, it had wood as brown as a walnut and a rope as thin as a pencil. It could barely hold a single man. Sebastian had to improvise, he went to a nearby store and bought; a stick as sharp as a knife; a rope as strong as concrete and wood as thick as a table.

Before Sebastian could start to reconstruct the bridge, an old and incapacitated man asked him "Are you rebuilding the bridge?" Sebastian nodded. The old man told him the story of the feeble bridge that it used to be a gift from Illyria to this island. You see, Athira was a poor and agonized island, so Illyria helped like giving them money and building houses, but they could not just use ships, so they made the bridge. But one night, Athira got flash-flooded, breaking the bridge into pieces and that was the end of the bridge. Then in a flash, the old man disappeared into thin air never to be seen again.

Subsequently, Sebastian started to build the bridge, he worked day and night until it was finished. His hands bled as quickly as a cheata and his sweat could fill up a bucket.

Finally, the rope bridge was reconstructed, Sebastian dashed as fast as an eagle to get to the other side. All of a sudden he heard something strange in a humongous house that morning, of laughter and shouting.

While at the same time, Sir Toby and Sir Andrew were about to play a harmless prank of fake card on Marvoplio. Their strategy was to make a replicate of Lady Olivia's love letter to Cesario but changed it instead to Marvoplio, make sure he acts insane then put him in the dugeon. But the prank failed. First, Marvoplio heard the whole plan, and "secondly, she hates yellow." "Send them to the dungeons!" declared Marvoplio. And they were sent to the dark caves of the dungeons.

Abruptly, Sebastian heard someone called out to him "Cesario!" he turned around and saw the most charming woman named lady Olivia; she proposed to him and got married. Though Sebastian got confused, he married her anyway because she looked beautiful. The next day, Sebastian and Viola reunited and Viola removed her disguise. Everyone was astonished, even Sebastian. Just then the Duke, Orsion, proposes to Viola. The mayhem is over. The End
